

Recently we enrolled a 2-year-old boy to our WCDC Life Program. His mother works in early childhood education, but the toddler has never attended school. In getting back to work for the school year, his mother no longer wanted to leave her son with her mother.

She felt that it was necessary that he interact with other children and have him become accustomed to a structured day where he could participate in daily educational activities. She came to me recently to express how happy she was with the program and how much her son is learning. She explained that he is happy to come to school and happy when he leaves school. She feels that WCDC has truly made her feel comfortable as an early childhood educator and mother when it comes to entrusting someone with her son. Stories like this are exactly what we are aiming for, and it is our goal for every one of our students to achieve success and love the joy of learning.
